1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a zoom lens and an imaging apparatus using the zoom lens. 2. Description of the Related Art In recent years, imaging apparatuses, such as digital still cameras, are being reduced in size and are even being substituted for silver salt cameras. In the above circumstances, requirements for further reducing the size of digital cameras, and particularly, zoom lenses to be used in the digital cameras, have become extremely severe. Furthermore, the recent development of a high-density semiconductor has accelerated the progress of imaging apparatuses and thus the progress of zoom lenses, and in particular, auto-focusing (AF) zoom lenses, has been remarkable. Such an auto-focusing (AF) zoom lens is generally a three-unit zoom lens including, from the object side to the image side, a first lens unit having negative optical power, a second lens unit having positive optical power and a third lens unit having positive optical power, and a stop is provided between the third lens unit and the image side. In the three-unit zoom lens having the structure described above, the first lens unit is moved for focusing. The three-unit zoom lens includes, as a tracking mechanism for moving the first lens unit, a cam ring having cam grooves and a cam groove that are formed in the inner peripheral surface thereof, and a plurality of cam pins provided in the third

Osteoprotegerin (OPG): a receptor activator of NF-kappaB that is elevated during HIV-induced hypercalcemia. Osteoprotegerin (OPG), a secreted receptor for the receptor activator of NF-kappaB (RANK) ligand (RANKL), has been shown to play a critical role in bone resorption. We investigated whether hypercalcemia in HIV-infected patients is associated with increased OPG serum concentrations. Serum OPG concentrations were analyzed in 29 patients with HIV infection, 39 patients with other hypercalcemia states, and 30 healthy control subjects. Serum OPG concentrations were elevated in patients with HIV infection (7.48 +/- 2.93 pmol/L, P Favorable outcome after surgical resection of intracranial metastatic melanoma. Surgical resection of intracranial metastatic melanoma is controversial, with some authors expressing concern over the high surgical morbidity and mortality rates. In this case report, a 68-year-old man with metastatic melanoma to the right basal ganglia (BG) underwent a subtotal resection of the tumor. Within 3 months, the patient was discharged with a seizure-free status and resumed full activities. Subsequent immunohistochemical studies of the resected specimen showed melanoma and proliferating cells in the ependymal layer of the right BG. The tumor seemed to be in the early stage of intracranial dissemination. These results support the notion that surgical resection of intracranial metastatic melanoma is an effective
