With the help of a 3D printer and your imagination, that could become a reality in the near future. A man in China has turned his home into a playable Mega Man 10 arcade machine thanks to a 3D printer. The only problem? The machine wasn't working. The operator of the machine took a gamble, ordering a brand new printer in the hope it would fix his problems. That gamble paid off, and now he's got a functioning and playable machine in his home. he'd need an extra 20,000 yuan (around $3,200) to finish it off. That amount is more than 10 times the price of his printer. While he'd planned to use the machine to show off his work and for kids to play, he's just happy that it's now complete. If you'd like to try your hand at making your own playable Mega Man game, head on over to the YouTube page of game designers Cliffy B, Sonic Fox, and Pico for some ideas. While one is pretty down on foreign languages, the other argues for a more reserved view
