Q: How can I resize a JPanel based on the JSplitPane I have a JPanel that is inside a JSplitPane. I would like the JPanel to resize with the JSplitPane when the JSplitPane is resized. I tried setting the border size to 1 and it works fine when the JSplitPane is stretched but not when it's shrunk. I also tried setting the border to be "Location-sensitive" but that just doesn't work. Is there a way to make the JPanel resize when the JSplitPane is resized? Thanks A: If you want the JPanel to resize with the split pane, just keep the size of the split pane in mind. For example, you might want your panel to be your left half of the split pane, so set the left component of the split pane with a JPanel whose size is about 60% the width of the split pane. This way the split pane shows about half the width and you get your desired effect of a smaller JPanel. Update Ok, I take it back. I've misunderstood your question. The JPanel should be larger than what you want to see when your split pane is small. Because JPanel resizes to its preferred size when the component is added to the JFrame. What you want instead is to wrap the JPanel in a JScrollPane. Then, in the JScrollPane's constructor, set the width of the JPanel to be the JFrame's width minus twice the desired panel width. This way the JPanel does not resize and you get the desired behavior of the JPanel fitting to the desired size of the split pane. Update 2 Here's how the modified code might look: class Test { public static void main(String[] args) { JFrame f = new JFrame("Test"); f.add(new JSplitPane() { JPanel left = new JPanel(); JPanel right = new JPanel(); JPanel scrollPanel = new JPanel(); scrollPanel.setBorder(BorderFactory.createLineBorder(Color.blue)); scrollPanel.setPreferredSize(new Dimension(300, 50));

Kildemere Kildemere is a historic estate near Ashby and Stanwell near Swindon in Wiltshire, England. The grand house was built in 1761 for William House, a London mercer (a kind of merchant) to an Italianate design by Richard Boyle, 3rd Earl of Cork and Orrery, who had married House's only daughter in 1759. The house remained in the House family until 1921. The estate is now divided and owned by the family of John House Jr, who was given the house in 1952, and his wife Joan. The gardens and lake, still known as Kildemere, are open to the public. The main part of the estate is a hotel. Wheeled vehicle seats are standard items of equipment in, for example, emergency vehicles such as fire engines and ambulances. The seat is usually rear-facing. It is advantageous if the seat can be readily raised to allow the emergency driver to get out of the vehicle without having to climb over the seat itself. Most modern vehicles have a manually-operated release catch. The release catch is in the form of a lever or other device. The lever must be operated to lift the seat to release the seat-latch so that the seat can be moved to its open position. A variety of mechanisms for moving and releasing the seat are known. Canadian patent 1,041,565 shows a device for moving a seat between an in-use position and an inoperative position. A plunger is movable between the in-use position and the inoperative position and is biased towards the inoperative position. The plunger is moveable by a control handle for moving the seat from its in-use position to its inoperative position. U.S. Pat. No. 5,598,919 shows an emergency vehicle seat with a movable seat back. A push bar is hinged to the seat back so that it pivots about a hinged axis as the seat back is moved between its lowered and raised positions. U.S. Pat. No. 6,937,787 shows a control handle for moving a vehicle seat from an in-use position to
