“With this technology we have taken the engine powering FIFA 21 to the next level, delivering a more realistic, reactive, and engaging experience,” said Craig Eubank, Vice President of Marketing. “The fans who’ve been playing FIFA on any of the platforms just put the kit on for fun, and now they can experience what it’s like to play football with the world’s best footballers, using everything from sprinting and dribbling, to passing and kicking. This gives us the opportunity to create an even richer, more authentic, and better-paced FIFA experience on all platforms, with hardware-accelerated graphics that make it feel like a real-life game.” HyperMotion Technology HyperMotion Technology is the most significant new addition to the engine powering FIFA on PlayStation 4 and Xbox One since FIFA 2010. Developed in partnership with Intel, this technology allows the game to track the player’s every movement, enabling the game to deliver the most realistic representation of football ever. FIFA 20 introduced a new, more responsive goalie, giving players more control over the direction and intensity of a save, and including a dynamic “braking effect” when a save is blocked. In FIFA 22, goalkeeper skills, including rolling saves and diving stops, have been upgraded to reflect the exciting, unpredictable and fast-paced nature of modern football. Goalies will now react to shots differently, with the defender intercepting the ball acting to obstruct the goalkeeper, leaving him with less time to react to and time to think and recover after a shot. This responsiveness has been further enhanced in FIFA 22 with goalkeepers able to sprint towards the ball to launch themselves off-foot, or sprint away from the ball to get back into position to collect it. FanFavourites Added FIFA’s fan favourites feature has been enhanced. Fans can now customize their team thanks to matchmaking innovations that give the best possible team selection. Fans can now create custom formations. In addition, players can earn trophies based on their personal performance in official competitions. New Metatarsal Muscles To improve the performance and visual fidelity of the game, engine updates give all players hair, and feature a refined calf muscle. Players also have new “metatarsal” muscles that are key in driving player movement and reacting to collisions. These muscle moves in different directions allowing players to “jump” off
