A PIXEL CLINICCVS-Clark Memorial CVS-Clark Memorial is a four-story, masonry and brick building in the City of Buffalo that was completed in 1915. It was erected to house a veteran's memorial. It was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1985. History On May 15, 1915, the Mayor of Buffalo delivered a proclamation to the Common Council of the City of Buffalo announcing that it was the wish of the Common Council to commemorate the gallantry of the American soldiers who had fought in the fields of battle during the Mexican War in the City of Buffalo. The proclamation was read in the Common Council Chambers on May 16, 1915. On April 26, 1916, a committee of citizens under the chairmanship of Senator J. J. Smith of Buffalo presented to the Common Council a resolution asking that "a suitable memorial be erected in commemoration of the soldiers of the United States who fell in the defense of the flag during the Mexican War." On May 3, 1916, the Common Council passed the resolution for the erection of the CVS-Clark Memorial and resolved to secure donations from the Buffalo branch of the U.S. Civil Service League, the American Legion, the War Women's National Association, the Civic League of Women, the Daughters of the American Revolution, and other patriotic societies and citizens. The City Comptroller was instructed to be an intermediary in the collection of donations. The Common Council accepted the petitions of Mayor James M. Higgins and A. G. O'Neill, second-vice-president of the Chamber of

The Y-chromosome genotype in the Andean region of Peru. Thirty Andean males, representing each of the major social and cultural population groups in the region (Moche, Chanka, Chimu and Aymara) were tested for Y-chromosome polymorphism. In addition to the control probes for STR loci, the Y-chromosomal short tandem repeat (Y-STR) marker, DYS19 was also used in the study. A total of 32 haplotypes were detected in these samples ($\alpha = 0.997$). Overall haplotype diversity (H) was 0.978. The minimum genetic distance was 0.0411, and the maximum, 0.9742. Q: Perl: Serial and multiple threads performance Recently I've been working on a project using Perl, which may seem unrelated to this question, but I was struck by a strange issue using multiple threads and serialization. My goal is simply to have different background processes (i.e. threads) perform the same activity, so that I can kill each of them at a certain point in time and have them all release their memory at the same time. I also need to prevent them from sharing the same resources (i.e. memory/input/output). The solution I've come up with is to spawn the threads using POSIX threads, pass them some serialized data that they can each work on and then when they reach a certain point (which can be determined by either time or some kind of shared global variable), kill the d0c515b9f4

Vascularized Bone Conduction Transplantation of the Anterior Mandible: Four Cases. The aim of this article is to present a clinically and histologically well-documented series of vascularized bone conduction transplantations (VBCTs) of the anterior mandible. A retrospective histologic and histomorphometric study of five cases treated with VBCTs between 2012 and 2014 was performed. Ten permanent implants were placed in five patients. The average duration of follow-up was 3 years. All five VBCTs remain clinically successful. Histologic and histomorphometric analysis revealed that the bone in the donor site had, on average, 22.8% new bone formation (NBF) in the trabecular bone and 50% NBF in the cortical bone. Bone grafting of the implant bed with anorganic bovine bone mixed with autologous bone marrow resulted in an average of 16.8% NBF in the trabecular bone and 46.3% NBF in the cortical bone ($p = 0.006$, Wilcoxon signed rank test). No signs of inflammation or tumor transformation were observed. Vascularized bone conduction transplantation of the anterior mandible offers a reliable option for reconstruction of the anterior mandible, allowing for immediate restoration of aesthetics and function. In spite of Governor-elect Jerry Brown's intentions of handing over some of the state's prized agricultural land to California's enemies, land rights groups are worried that they won't even be able to protect the land for native species. This after Brown pledged to uphold California's environmental protections during his campaign. At a high point last year, California's farmers had enough of the state's "slow growth" initiatives. Activists showed up on farm fields across the state to call out water grabbers and green activists for trying to put the squeeze on their livelihood. We take a hard look at our health status on
