Chronic hepatitis C virus (HCV) infection can cause fibrosis and may accelerate the course of HIV infection. We conducted a cross-sectional study of HIV-HCV coinfecting patients receiving highly active antiretroviral therapy to determine the effects of treatment on HIV load, HCV RNA, and fibrosis. Patients coinfecting with HIV and HCV (n = 37) without a previous treatment with HCV-specific nucleoside analogues were included. The median age was 50 years, and the median duration of HCV infection was 14 years. The median number of CD4+ T lymphocytes was 528 per microL, and the median HIV load was less than the limit of quantification (0.03 IU/mL). Mean liver stiffness was 7.5 kPa. Forty-one percent of patients were taking nucleoside analogues; hepatitis B virus (HBV) therapy was given to 29% of patients, and HCV therapy to 20%. Eight (22%) patients had an HIV load less than 200 copies per milliliter, and 3 of these patients had an undetectable load. HCV load was high in all patients with a suppressed HIV load. No statistically significant difference in HCV load was observed between patients with an HIV load greater than or equal to 100 copies per milliliter and those with a suppressed HIV load. Charts of 50 patients indicated no effect of therapy on HCV load or liver stiffness; however, more data are needed to confirm the absence of change in these parameters. Hepatitis C virus load was not lower in patients with HIV loads less than 100 copies per milliliter than in those with greater than 100 copies per milliliter (median, 5.09 vs. 4.91 log₁₀ copies per milliliter, respectively; P = 0.935). Nine patients had a > or =0.5-fold decrease in liver stiffness; 2 (29%) of the patients with a HIV load less than 200 copies per milliliter had a greater than or equal to 0.5-fold decrease in liver stiffness compared with none

This study investigates the diffusion of European social groups and their Y-chromosome gene pools (Y-Chr) from various regions in Greece. The Y-Chr was determined by means of published and unpublished data on the Y-Chr of the major phyla in Greek iconography as well as from in situ Neanderthal Y-chromosome DNA dating. Analyses of the distributions of Y-Chrs for archeological groups from different regions of Greece revealed that the distribution of Y-Chrs in icons, when referenced to different populations, is not random. The origin of icons exhibiting male lineages similar to those in early populations of Europe (e.g., Basques and northern Italians) is in the early Neolithic, while those with Y-Chrs similar to those in ancient Melanesians (e.g., Minoans, Trojans, Thracians) show a much more recent provenance, likely in the Middle Neolithic. This suggests that later phases of iconography in Greece were 'imported' from elsewhere in the eastern Mediterranean. The results of the Y-Chr study are discussed in the context of cultural diffusion in the Aegean and the Levant.HELP WANTED--CREATE A COMMUNITY COLLEGE CONCEPT FEEDING THE HUNGER Where are the jobs?
